Sedona Cloud Rays

Canon 7D, Canon 10-22 lens, polarizer filter, ISO 100, aperture priority, f/22, focal length 15, exposure time 1/13, exposure compensation -2/3.

In January of 2014 I went to Arizona to see my parents. Sedona was by far my favorite part of our travels, although we only spent 4-5 hours driving around looking at the rock monuments. A lot of planes departing from Phoenix travel above Sedona. Some of the clouds in this photo are contrails from jets passing overhead. My time was limited that day, but I intend to go back some day on my own. There's nothing I love more than loading my camping and photography equipment into my SUV and going adventuring!

A Note from Sonya

I am excited about the direction the club is going with the addition of commentary added this year. I for one have learned so much about critique vs. commentary and am excited to continue in this direction, as I feel it adds a very important layer for growth, and I hope that others are finding it enjoyable and a learning experience as well. We have a very active and supportive club and I am super proud to be a member of Pilchuck Camera Club. As we end 2014 I wanted to take time to say thank you! It is so fun to be a part of a group that truly inspires and supports each other in our successes and learning.
