Title: Thor's Well

By: Tracy Carson

Anyone who has been to Thor's Well knows it's not necessarily an easy shot to get. I have been there on four different occasions in the last several years and shot it twice. The first couple of times I was there were in the winter. I have since learned that summer is a much better time to attempt shooting it. The tides are calmer and it's not as intimidating. There are also other people around. The first couple of times I wanted to shoot it, no one else was there and I just watched it from a safe distance which was probably a smart idea. Last summer we went out there on a low tide so I could see what it was like standing on the edge of it. I decided to take my shot at sunset on a high tide, which at the time I think was at around 8', this year the tide was high again, but at about 7'. I am still in search of my perfect shot, but I'm getting closer. Last year I shot it under a cloudy sky. I was finally able to make something out of the image, but it wasn't what I wanted. This year we had the sky, but the tide was lower and there wasn't as much water flowing in and out. My perfect image is still out there and I will shoot it again. I never get tired of the Oregon Coast so I know I'll go back. I recommend anyone who wants to shoot it know their tides, go out there ahead of time to get a feel for it and stay safe. It's a shot that takes patience and persistence to get if you want it. Filters are a must if you are shooting at sunset because you want a slow shutter speed to slow the water down, but not blow out the sun.

Camera data - Canon 80D, Tokina 11-16 @ 16, ISO 125, .80 seconds, F22 with a graduated neutral density filter on.

Annual Competitions

For our newer members that may not know, PCC has several annual competitions coming up including the following:

Image of the Year – must be an image that was submitted between January 2018 and the end of December 2018. The image should not be altered after the original submission (unless it was resubmitted). You may submit up to 3 images.

Assigned Subject is Bokeh: You may submit up to 3 images and those images must have been taken between January 2018 and the end of December 2018.

Wildflower – Must be wildflowers and you may submit up to 3 images taken between January 2018 and the end of December 2018.

The deadline to submit images for these competitions will be announced at the December club meeting.

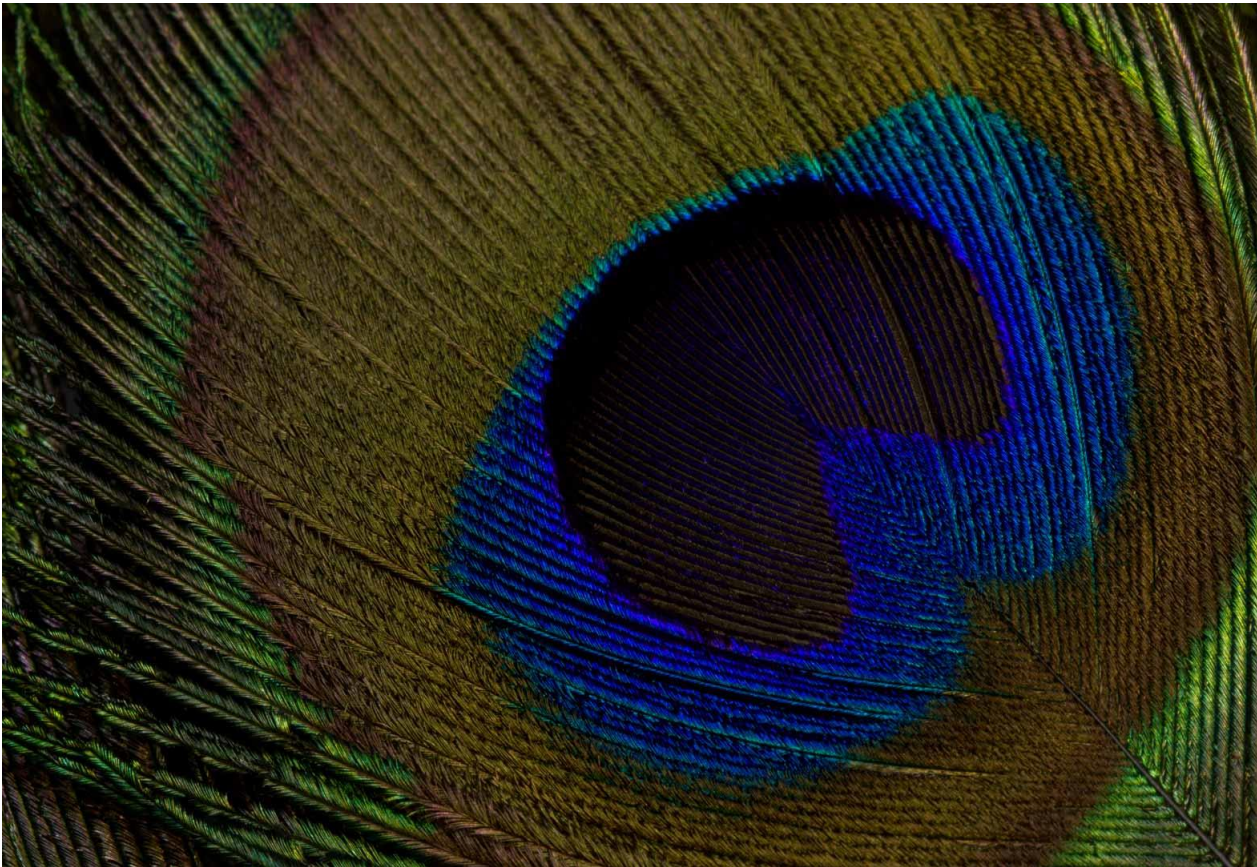

If you would like to see more information on how to participate in these competitions please see the club handbook or ask another club member.
